 - The federal government has announced an inquiry into the “integration, employment and resettlement” of refugees and humanitarian migrants in Australia.
 - The review, to be led by Professor Peter Shergold, has broad ranging terms of reference that would allow the investigation of welfare and support services, employment requirements and work rights, and any other factor that relates to the improvement of outcomes for resettled refugees and the community.
 - [The review] can invite submissions and seek information, and is expected to report back by late February.
 - Guardian Australia understands the terms of reference allow Shergold significant freedom to examine all aspects of support services and employment issues for refugees and humanitarian migrants.
